Millennium Guild of Boston Against the Taking of Animal Life.

WOULD STOP EATING MEAT

There Are 200 Members Now and Twice as Many Are on Probation.

The Millennium Guild is the latest organization for public uplift to be started in Boston. Though less than one year old it has already more than two hundred registered members, with twice as many on the list of probationers. However anxious a person may be to join, he is not admitted until he has proved to the satisfaction of the leaders that he will not, within a short time at least, become a backslider. "It requires some fortitude and strength of character to obey the rules of the guild," Mrs. Maud R. L. Sharpe, the founder and first president, explained. "When persons come to me saying they wish to join at once I tell them to wait six months. It is not easy to give up habits to which they have been accustomed all their lives. At the end of six months if they have stood the test then we are glad to take them in.

"The object of the guild is to promote a just consideration of all races, buman and sub-human. We believe that all creatures have a right to life and, except in cases of self-defence, to protection in that life by human beings

"One of the greatest crimes of the thoughtless is the wearing of furs. One of the many rights neglected by women is putting some of their heart as well as some of their mind into the question of clothing. Creatures are given their skins and feathers for their own protection, not for ours. Our ideas of beauty are in a savage state. It is not beautiful to put dead bedies of birds on a hat, nor to ress oneself up in the skins of dead animals. No annual eater can rightly call himself an animal lover.

"It must be thoughtlessness that causes many humanitarian workers to wear fur and aigrettes and to eat flesh. Take the Bible, the book which bears the message, 'Blessed are the merciful'; often it is bound in the skin of trapped animals. More than a hundred thousand sealskins are used annually for binding Bibles alone. Chapter, D. A. R.; Mrs. Henrietta Seeley. "We do not feel as beenly about using ole leather, since cattle are not killed for their skins, though we are sure that when the killing of cattle stops the shoe manufacturer will find a suitable substitute. One of our members had a pair of shoes made with one sole of leather and the other of a substitute. The leather wore out first and in every particular the substitute proved more satisfactory. We believe that a number of changes will come because of their economic value rather than because of the humanitarian reasons. That is not so high a motive, but it, is effective.

"J. Howard Moore, author of "The New Ethics' and 'The Universal Kinship,' was so impressed by our movement that he joined the guild by wire. He holds the same views as those advocated by the guild. It has been reported that we were, or rather that we thought we were, living perfect lives. That is not true, None of us fancies for an instant that perfection is possible for any of us. We are only trying to live up to the Golden Rule with sub-human creatures as well as human.

"It was because I could not forget the great suffering caused when animals are killed that I gave up meat. I haven't eaten it now for more than eleven years and find that I am better without it. It wasn't easy for me to give it up, because I was very fond of certain kinds. Because of this I wish everybody to make a six months trial before joining the guild. It is estimated that 30,000,000 living creatures are put to death each year for their when compared to those killed to supply

Mrs. Sharpe was a Chicago girl and was educated abroad. After extensive travels she settled down in Boston where her home on Commonwealth avenue is highly praised from an artistic standpoint. Most of the work in finishing this house was done by Mrs. Sharpe herself.

One of her recreations has been the preparation and publication of a Golden has provided for this, for a person who gule recipe book in which more than 600 faints will fall down and soon recover if no different ways of preparing vegetables are described. A person who similarly faints is carefully supported in a chair, and the face is plied with cold witer applications, famed, the result being that the fainting is prolonged. On the other hand, a man who drops in the street with epilepsy or catalepsy is tavariably individual flat on his back, which in some case is enough to shift him.
